Dad I have a limpet stuck to my finger said Lilly.

Write out the sentence using speech marks to show what is actually being said.
Re read the story to familiarise yourself with the sequence.

Next day it was school.

All her friends tried to pull the limpet off Sally's finger. Mr Blueberry, the nature teacher, said that limpets live for twenty years, and stay all their whole lives on the same rock.
In the afternoon, Sally’s mother took her to the hospital, to see the doctor.

He tried chemicals, injections, potions and pinchers. Sally was beginning to feel upset.
Everyone was making too much fuss all around her.

She kicked over the doctor's chair and ran.

She ran through the endless corridors. She just wanted to be on her own.
She ran out of the hospital and through the town.

She didn’t stop when she got to the beach.
She ran through people’s sandcastles. She even ran over a big man.

When she reached the water, she jumped in with all her clothes on.
But Sally didn’t forget what Mr Blueberry, the nature teacher, had said.

Very carefully, she lifted the limpet by the top of its shell. She carried it back across the beach, past the man she had walked over, and gently, so gently, she put the limpet back on the very same rock where she had found it the day before. Then, humming to herself, she took the long way home across the beach.

Recap the final part of the story. Use bullet points to fill in the flow map (remember to include the work from Monday describing the rock pool and from yesterday describing the limpet.)

- Where did your character go the following day? Did someone try to help your character? What happened?
- Who took them to the hospital? What happened there? How did the doctor try to get it off?
- How did your character react? How did they try to escape?
- How did they get back to the place where the thing originally attached itself?
- How did your character get the sticky thing off? How did they feel at the end of your story?
